a protective barrier to safeguard health care providers during airway management.

CHILDREN WITH ADHD: LEARNING CHALLENGES DURING COVID

Dr. Jean-François Lemay, MD, and colleagues surveyed 587 Canadian families with children with ADHD to find if their educational goals were being met during the pandemic. The research in Frontiers in Education revealed that 59 per cent of children found it 'very challenging' to adjust to online classes and 41 per cent had less than five hours of schoolwork per week. There was a significant association between depression severity and difficulties with starting and managing tasks. "As we monitor the reopening of schools and adjustments implemented by school boards, it is important to specifically understand how the lack of face-to-face instruction has impacted learning in children with ADHD," says Lemay. Research team: Tasmia Hai, MA, Rose Swansburg, MA, Dr. Frank MacMaster, PhD

The study was supported by the Alberta Children's Hospital Foundation and the Owerko Centre at ACHRI.

IMPROVING THE OUTCOMES FOR CHILDREN WITH PERINATAL STROKE
Dr. Helen Carlson, PhD, Dr. Adam Kirton, MD, Dr. Alicia Hilderley, PhD, and Suraya Meghji, BSc, have won the 2021 Paul Dudley White International Scholar Award for the highest ranked abstract submitted by Canada to the International Stroke Conference 2021. Carlson investigates neural networks to understand brain neuroplasticity after early life injury. The abstract 'Frontal Functional Connectivity Networks and Executive Function Following Perinatal Stroke' is published in the journal Stroke.
