AWARDS

Peak Scholars in COVID-19 Innovation Excellence

Congratulations to the recipients of this year’s Peak Scholars Awards dedicated to COVID-19 research. “They brought their skills in entrepreneurship, innovation, commercialization and knowledge engagement, along with deep understanding of their research areas, and moved rapidly to develop projects that have had a real impact on our communities,” says Dr. William Ghali, vice-president (research). Thank you to our child health and wellness researchers for these brilliant projects!

DISCOVERY BETWEEN MATERNAL ENVIRONMENT AND DEVELOPING BRAIN
Neuroimmune cells overwhelmed by stress are now known to be key contributors underpinning neurodevelopmental disorders. ACHRI's Dr. Deborah Kurrasch, PhD, and Dr. Jessica Rosin, PhD, a postdoctoral fellow at ACHRI, led the research published in Developmental Cell. Working with mice, they found a relationship between prenatal stress and disruptions in brain development, affecting males more than females. Neurodevelopmental disorders are more prominent in boys in some conditions such as autism spectrum disorder (ASD) and attention-deficit/hyperactivity disorders (ADHD).
